Local activists leery of Jenner media storm

Transgender advocates weigh in on Bruce Jenner's upcoming '20/20' interview

By Tracy Swartz | CHICAGO TRIBUNE

As a kid, Jessica Sage Celimene-Rowell watched Bruce Jenner win the gold medal in the decathlon in the 1976 Olympics.

Lately, though, she has watched her childhood idol reduced to tabloid fodder, appearing on the cover of various magazines amid rumors he is transitioning from man to woman. On one cover, Jenner is Photoshopped with lipstick and blush.

Celimene-Rowell, who lives in Hyde Park, said she is concerned how Jenner will be portrayed in his sit-down with Diane Sawyer set to air 8 p.m. Friday on ABC's "20/20." It's been widely rumored that Jenner will discuss his gender identity in the two-hour interview. ABC released a third trailer this week teasing the show with Jenner saying, "My whole life has been getting me ready for this."

But some Chicago transgender activists like Celimene-Rowell said they are concerned Jenner's announcement and the resulting media storm may have a negative impact on the transgender community at a time when transgender awareness is on an upswing with "Orange Is the New Black" actress Laverne Cox and writer Janet Mock continuing to speak out about their transgender journeys.

"I think the trans movement is strong right now," Celimene-Rowell said. "It doesn't need a celebrity mascot right now. In fact, a celebrity mascot may do more damage than good."

It's unclear how many transgender people live in Chicago or the United States because activists say that some people won't publicly identify as transgender, but UCLA's Williams Institute, which researches sexual orientation and gender identity, estimated in 2011 there are nearly 700,000 transgender Americans.

Some transgender people have chosen to document their lives on reality television. Discovery Life Channel's "New Girls on the Block," which premiered this month, profiles a group of transgender women in Kansas City, Mo. "Becoming Us," an ABC Family show slated to air this summer, will follow the life of an Evanston Township High School teenager as his father transitions into a woman.

It's unclear whether Jenner, a longtime staple of reality TV, will allow cameras to document his experience beyond the Sawyer interview. Jenner, 65, has yet to speak publicly about transition rumors as he has been photographed with long hair and polish on his fingernails.

Andre Perez, who founded the Transgender Oral History Project, which collects and shares transgender stories, said they feel empathy for Jenner, who has 10 children and has been married three times, including to Kris Jenner, mother of the media-dominating Kardashian sisters. ("They" is Perez' preferred gender pronoun.)

Perez, 27, said transitioning can be difficult enough out of the limelight. Perez said Jenner's announcement may show that transgender people come from various socioeconomic groups but Jenner may not be the face the transgender community is looking for.

"I don't think the fact that someone's famous means that they're going to be a good spokesman," said Perez, of Humboldt Park.

Kim Hunt, executive director of the South Side-based Affinity Community Services, which provides support to African-American LGBTQ youth, said any awareness brought to gender identity issues could be a positive outcome of Jenner's interview.

Transgender people face an exceptionally high suicide-attempt rate, violence and discrimination, according to Williams Institute studies. Hunt said at the very least, she hopes Jenner gets to speak honestly about his journey.

"While I am not a huge fan of the media circus that is the Kardashians, again, it's not an easy thing to do to come out as transgender," Hunt said.

Survey finds U.S. really is a binge-watch nation

By Patrick Kevin Day | LOS ANGELES TIMES

Binge watching is definitely a buzzword in the media, but according to a new survey, it really has become the dominant mode of TV consumption in the U.S.

Deloitte LLP's Digital Democracy Survey of more than 2,000 content consumers age 14 and older found that 68 percent of respondents said they have binge-watched a series at some point, with 31 percent saying they did so at least once a week.

Binge-watching in this instance was defined as watching three or more episodes of the same series in a single sitting.

The digital revolution that is bringing TV content streaming into our households in more accessible ways than ever before also is letting us watch when we want. More than half of the survey's respondents said they chose to stream movies and TV shows, while 45 percent said they preferred to watch programs live on traditional broadcast or cable TV.

No surprise to the millions of "Game of Thrones" or "Mad Men" devotees out there, the survey found that dramas were the dominant binge-watch genre, with 54 percent of respondents saying they choose to power through those hourlong episodes.

Despite their shorter length in general, comedies were less popular as a binge-watch subject, with 20 percent saying they choose to binge on belly laughs. The results also indicated a split among genders, with more women among the drama bingers and more men among the comedy bingers.

Though more TV is being streamed than ever before, the survey found that doesn't necessarily mean Americans are sitting in front of their screens carefully parsing the framing or detail put into many of the prestige series on TV. The study found that 90 percent of respondents said they multitasked while watching programs, with two age demographics — Millennials and Generation X — performing an average of three other activities while watching, including Internet browsing and text messaging.

Advertisers may take note of the fact that nearly 75 percent of participants in the survey said they pay more attention to digital ads over ads on traditional broadcast TV—and 62 percent said they'd be more willing to watch those ads online if it meant they didn't have to pay more for their streaming services.

Increasingly, the survey indicated, Millennials are moving away from traditional TV, with the Internet the most valued service among 93 percent of the younger generation. Nearly 40 percent of all respondents said they play video games on a daily or weekly basis, a pastime that is spread over gaming consoles (24 percent), smartphones (21 percent) and tablets (11 percent).

Boy, 15, charged in robbery, sex assault on Blue Line train

By Carlos Sadovi and

Rosemary Regina Sobol | CHICAGO TRIBUNE

A 15-year-old boy was charged as an adult Wednesday in the sexual assault and robbery of a woman on a Blue Line train Monday, police said.

The boy, Deshawn Isabelle, of Chicago, was charged with one felony count of aggravated criminal sexual assault/bodily harm and one felony count of robbery, according to Sally Daly, a spokeswoman for the Cook County state's attorney's office. Isabelle is being charged as an adult and is expected to appear in bond court Thursday, Daly said.

At 9:30 a.m. Wednesday he turned himself in to the police after seeing his photograph broadcast in the media, police said in a news release. The boy arrived with a guardian, police said.

Police credited the CTA's security camera network that allowed police to "quickly identify and apprehend a suspect."

The arrest came a day after police released surveillance photos of the suspect they say attacked the woman on the train between the Cicero and Oak Park stops.

The 41-year-old woman boarded an eastbound Forest Park branch train at the Oak Park Avenue station about 3:10 p.m. Monday, police said in an alert. "Shortly thereafter," she was attacked and knocked to the floor and sexually assaulted, police said.

No other passengers were in the car at the time, police said.

The suspect took the woman's iPhone and cash and fled the train two stops later at the Cicero Avenue station and boarded a westbound train to the Austin Boulevard stop, where he exited, the alert said.

» A private contemporary art collection, with iconic works by Andy Warhol, Jasper Johns and others and with a value estimated at $400 million, is being donated to the Art Institute by local philanthropists, in what the museum is calling the largest gift of art in its history and a coup for the institution and the city.

Homicides from April 15 to 4 p.m. Wednesday

HOMICIDE TRACKER

By Megan Crepeau | REDEYE

Ten killings were reported in Chicago in the past week, including a double homicide in the Belmont Cragin community on the Northwest Side, according to preliminary police data.

A 30-year-old man and a 34-year-old woman were walking in the 2700 block of North Laverne Avenue early Sunday morning when someone got out of a vehicle and opened fire, authorities said. The woman was shot in the head and the man was shot multiple times, according to police, and both died later that day. Police sources say the shooting was gang-related.

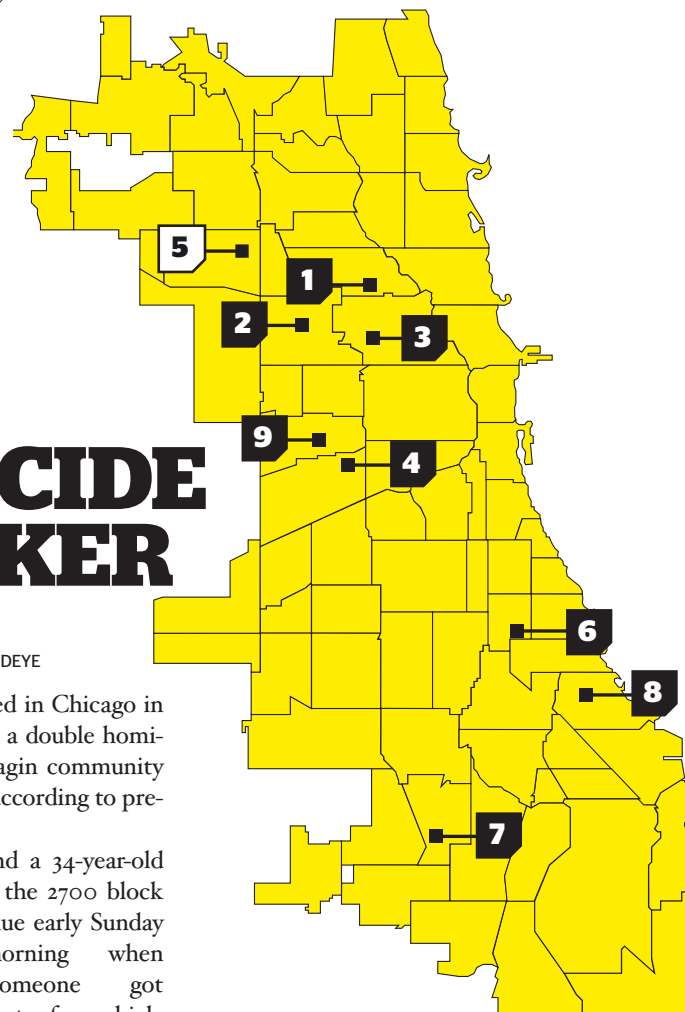

There have been four reported homicides so far this year in Belmont Cragin. In 2014, there were six total killings reported there, according to RedEye data.

Citywide, gunshot homicides were reported in several South Side neighborhoods as well as Humboldt Park.

Meanwhile, a woman was found strangled in the 2500 block of West Moffat Street in Logan Square on April 15, and her death was ruled a homicide, authorities confirmed. A 50-year-old man also was stabbed to death at his restaurant in West Town on Saturday.

Twenty-four killings have been reported citywide so far this month. Thirty-six homicides were reported in Chicago in April 2014, according to RedEye data. There have been 110 homicides reported so far this year, a RedEye analysis has found.

Project Fi challenges major mobile carriers

Google is trying to shake up the wireless phone industry with a low-priced service designed to pressure major carriers into making it more affordable for people to get online and use Google's services.

The service, called "Project Fi," debuted Wednesday, about two months after Google revealed its plans to expand its ever-growing empire into providing wireless connections for smartphones.

Google Inc. is selling the basic phone service for $20 a month and will only charge customers for the amount of cellular data that they use each month, instead of a flat rate. Each gigabyte of data will cost $10 a month. That means a customer could sign up for a plan offering three gigabytes of data and get $20 back if only one gigabyte was used in a month.

Most wireless phone carriers allow their customers to roll over unused data into another month of service without refunding any money.

Project Fi initially will be sold only to a narrow audience that owns the Nexus 6, a smartphone that Motorola Mobility made with Google's help.

Google's pricing setup makes Project Fi less expensive than most of the comparable plans offering by the four biggest wireless phone carriers—Verizon, AT&T, T-Mobile and Sprint.

The major carriers, though, offer a variety of family plans that could still be better deals than Project Fi. Those bundled plans allow several phone lines to share a pool of cellular data.

Besides trying to bring down the prices of wireless phone plans, Google is promising subscribers that their Nexus 6 model will automatically connect with the fastest network available.

Rather than building its own network, Google is leasing space on cellular towers built by Sprint and T-Mobile, which are hoping the deals will boost their profits without costing them too many customers tempted to defect to Project Fi.

Senate to hold hearings on police body cameras

The Senate on Wednesday prepared to discuss more widespread use of police body cameras. Sen. Tim Scott (R-S.C.) called for the body-camera hearings following the fatal shooting in North Charleston of a black man, who was shot in the back and killed by a police officer on April 4.

By Leonor Vivanco REDEYE

In his backyard in Tsawwassen, about an hour outside Vancouver, a young Brent Seabrook whacked puck after puck against his family's garage door.

"I used to fall over all the time back then," the Blackhawks defenseman said of his 10-year-old self, who was known for losing his balance during hockey tournaments.

He was practicing what would become a wicked slap shot over a lengthy NHL career. In fact, that shot was clocked at 98.6 mph at the 2015 NHL All-Star Game.

Seabrook's dad, Gary, said he could tell Brent's shots were getting harder judging by the damage done.

"One year we had about 60 or 70 holes in it and one weekend we were out there fixing it all up and plastering it," Brent Seabrook said.

Fast-forward 20 years and that slap shot—and his other skills, of course—still is a deadly weapon. In triple overtime Tuesday, he said he hit the puck as hard as he could and scored his second goal of the playoff series against Nashville.

Fans likely remember him netting the Game 7 winner beyond regulation against Detroit in the 2013 playoffs. Or against Boston that year, when his goal from long range helped the Hawks hoist the Stanley Cup.

Those two goals in 2013 crowned Seabrook "Mr. Overtime," but his late-game success stretches back further. As a rookie in 2005, Seabrook's first NHL goal was a game winner in overtime against St. Louis. Four nights later, he smacked home another OT tally.

It's no secret he's aggressive with the puck. His career-high 181 shots this season—tops among Hawks defensemen—are proof. He has eight goals to show for it, too.

All the signs were there at a young age that Seabrook was driven to play at the highest level.

He had an assignment in seventh grade to write down three things he wanted to be.

"He wrote down one thing. That was to be a professional hockey player," his father said.

And, his teacher asked, what if he doesn't play in the NHL?

"Brent was like, 'No, I'm going to play in the NHL,'" said Seabrook's mother, Suzanne.

Good thing that worked out.

SHOOT. BLOCK. REPEAT.

7TH-GRADE BRENT SEABROOK WOULD BE SOOO PROUD OF HIS OLDER SELF

—Center Marcus Kruger

As the Hawks pursue their third Cup in six seasons, Seabrook continues to rack up accolades. His name is etched twice on the Cup. He earned a gold medal at the 2010 Olympics. This year, he secured a spot on the All-Star roster. All this, and he just turned 30 on April 20.

"I don't feel 30. I don't know if it's having a kid and he's keeping me young or being around some of these hooligans that keeps me young," Seabrook said. His son, Carter—whose middle name is Seven, like Seabrook's jersey number—will be 2 in August, and his wife, Dayna, is expecting a baby girl in June.

Suzanne Seabrook said fatherhood hasn't changed her son.

"It's completed him more," she said. "He's a very caring person and he's got a huge heart. He loves that little guy, and his little boy follows him everywhere.”

Seabrook's parents occasionally attend playoff games to see their son play. They spend the holidays together in Chicago and time over the summer at Brent's lake house in Kelowna, a waterfront resort town about four hours away from where his parents live in Tsawwassen. It's where Seabrook relaxes in the offseason, road biking, golfing, engaging in water sports or simply hanging out on his boat with his brother.

Growing up in Canada, Seabrook and his younger sibling, Keith, played street hockey when the weather permitted. Otherwise, it was floor hockey in the house.

“It was definitely always sweet victory,” Keith, a defenseman with the Hawks' AHL affiliate Rockford IceHogs, said about beating his older brother. “It didn't happen often. But when it did, it was a good feeling, that's for sure.”

Brent Seabrook's now in his 10th season, making him the longest tenured Hawks player along with Duncan Keith. Next season is the last year of his current contract.

Although Seabrook is not the team captain, he's got the respect of his teammates.

“He may not have a letter on him, but he's one of the leaders for sure, somebody that always steps up when something needs to be said,” center Marcus Kruger said. “He always says the right things.”

In the public spotlight, however, he's a bit guarded and seen at times pulling his cap down low when a camera or microphone gets near him.

“He's not someone that seeks out atten-

Blackhawks defenseman Brent Seabrook is a tremendous athlete. That much we know. Otherwise, he wouldn't be playing in the NHL. Here are seven things we learned about the guy off the ice who wears the No. 7 jersey on it. L.V.

» He scored a cameo on NBC's “Chicago Fire” last year. Seabrook and Duncan Keith order milk at a local bar and leave tickets to the outdoor hockey game at Soldier Field as a tip.

“I thought he was pretty good. I think he deserves a job in the offseason,” said Seabrook's brother, Keith. Though Seabrook didn't drink on TV, fans have seen the team chug beer and champagne from the Stanley Cup.

» He once wrote a book report in fifth grade on NHL legend Wayne Gretzky.

» He idolized defenseman Chris Pronger and ended up rooming with him during the 2010 Olympics. Months later, the Hawks beat Pronger's Philadelphia team to win the Cup.

» Every year since 2006, he has been affiliated with what's become known as the Brent Seabrook Celebrity ICE Bowl. He's also recruited his teammates to bowl and benefit the Inner-City Education Program, a nonprofit organization that provides academic scholarships to underprivileged kids who play hockey in the Chicago area.

» He has a dog named Stanley. Of course.

» He has a tattoo on his forearm of the date 8-11-12, his wedding date.

» Every summer after he turned 19, when Seabrook returned home he played road hockey with his high school buddies and the winning team got the Pilsner Cup (a couple of cases of beer) as the prize. His mother said he told his friends if he ever won the Stanley Cup that they would play for it. So in 2010 they put on their roller blades and battled it out at a local arena when he brought the Cup home.

1	Bears-Packers. Thanksgiving night. Favre's number retired. Is that the day the world ends?	No. The world ended in 2012 as was predicted. This is all a dream.	It very well may be. But if not, at the very least I'd like to see if we can get a pulse out of Jay Cutler.	Packers win. Inner fat kid wins. Cutler throws same number of TDs as Favre. Nope, just another Thanksgiving with the Bears.	God. I hope so.	The world ends only if the Cubs win the World Series on the same night as well.
2	How would you get Lindsey Vonn to enjoy golf more?	I told you to stop asking me about golf.	For any downhill par 4 or par 5, she should just be able to ski right on down to the green.	By giving her what I'm drinking right now, and it's not water!	How the rest of us enjoy golf—we don't.	Add snow and mix well.
3	What should the 49ers give youth soccer teams in exchange for parking on their fields?	A ride on a player's shoulders during a game. Many forms must be signed first.	Oranges. Kids seem to love 'em.	Greenbacks. Bands. Gwop. C.R.E.A.M.	Candy probably.	The 49ers players should offer to sell youth league candy bars outside grocery stores. Want to buy some candy?
4	Describe how worried you are about Nikola Mirotic's injury on a scale of your choosing.	Four legs on a scale of "Ah, that hurt" to "Owwwwwwwwwwww."	Zero. This is just a way for the Bulls to appease the injury gods because Derrick Rose is healthy.	Two beers out of a 12 pack. I don't even have a buzz.	On a scale of 1 to even, I can't.	On a scale of 1 inch to 6-10? My concern is about 4-6.
5	What's the sports equivalent of "Full House" getting a reboot?	"Hang Time" becoming an actual professional basketball league. No, Dick Butkus doesn't have to play.	If Michael Jordan and Scottie Pippen came back to the Bulls. Wait, are Michael and Scottie coming back to the Bulls?	"Blue Crumbs: Shaq Ate All The Chips." streaming on Hulu.	Aaron Sorkin's "Sports Night." Duh.	The 2013-14 Brooklyn Nets. And that didn't end well either.

KINDNESS PAYS OFF FOR GASOL

By K.C. Johnson | CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Bulls forward Pau Gasol won the 2014-15 Magic Johnson Award, presented annually by the Professional Basketball Writers Association to honor the NBA player who “best combines excellence on the basketball court with cooperation and dignity in dealing with the media and public.”

Gasol beat out finalists Stephen Curry of the Warriors, Manu Ginobili of the Spurs, LeBron James of the Cavaliers and Damian Lillard of the Trail Blazers in voting by the association’s 175 members.

“I just try to be helpful. I try to help other people do their jobs well,” Gasol said. “I understand my position and that this is a part of our jobs. So I always try to be kind and polite, even when I’m not feeling great or I might be upset because of the loss. I understand that it’s still part of my job to be one of the team’s leaders and role models to stand up and share my thoughts when I need.”

Gasol said the award carried special significance because it’s named after Johnson, the former Lakers great who was recognized by the PBWA as the ideal model for the award. Gasol won two titles with the Lakers.

Gasol said. “It rubs off on people, so you want to balance out the negatives in the world with some positives. So that’s what I try to do.”

Gasol said he has maintained his positive ideal despite enduring critical articles over the years because of family values and his love for reading.

“I try to understand that it’s nothing personal,” Gasol said of the criticism. “People are just trying to do their jobs. I don’t like people getting me to react in a negative way. So when there’s criticism, when things are not going well, you understand it, you accept it, and then you spend some time with yourself and you release and understand why things happened and you move on.”

Polls are open for RedEye Rock 'n' Vote 2015

VOTING MUSIC

By Josh Terry | REDEYE

Not that we're biased or anything, but Chicago has one of the best, if not the best, music scenes in the country. Teeming with immense talent from genres including but not limited to indie rock, experimental, rap, dance, punk and pop, the city's vibrant community is constantly evolving. For every Kanye West, Chance The Rapper and Wilco that Chicago produces, there are hundreds more talented, hardworking acts going relatively unnoticed.

RedEye's annual Rock 'n' Vote competition attempts to put a finger on the pulse of these rising acts, and this year's Top 10, selected from about 100 local artist submissions, is just brimming with worthwhile competition. Though it's not a completely comprehensive slice of Chicago's vibrant scene, it's a testament to the undeniable quality that's found here.

Now these rising artists need your help—until 5 p.m. Sunday, visit redeyechicago.com/rocknvote and pick who you want to go on to the next round. (You can vote once per calendar day.) The Top 4 vote-getters will compete for your votes to earn this year's Rock 'n' Vote title, as well as a slot at this year's Taste of Chicago.

1 Marrow

Neighborhoods: Logan Square, Roscoe VillageExperience: Three of the quartet's members—singer-guitarist Liam Cunningham, 21; singer Macie Stewart, 22; and bassist Lane Beckstrom, 23—were in popular local band Kids These Days while they were in high school. Cunningham and Beckstrom have been playing music together since the two were 12. Drummer Matt Carroll, 25, played a one-off gig with Cunningham in high school, which shows how much history this young band has together.Sound: Cunningham says that whenever he's asked this question, he avoids the adjective-heavy descriptions to settle for the straightforward answer, "I play in a rock band."Influences: Cunningham is currently listening to a lot of Courtney Barnett and T. Rex.Upcoming show: May 22 at Logan Square Auditorium.Big accomplishment: "We finished our record. It took over a year, but we did it," Cunningham says. "The Gold Standard," which was mainly recorded in Cunningham's home studio, should arrive this year.

The Blind Staggers

Neighborhoods: Old Irving Park, Portage Park, Des PlainesExperience: Five yearsSound: "I like to say country punk, but really we're just a rock band," says singer-guitarist Damien Christian Wilburn, 35. "Most of our songs are about drinking too much and relationship problems and all the hangovers that come from both those things"

Influences: "Lucero, Ryan Bingham, classic rock and anything blues rock-related is right up our alley."Upcoming performance: May 16 at Abbey Pub

The Future Laureates

Neighborhoods: Lincoln Square, Edgewater, Ukrainian VillageExperience: Seven years. The band's core members met at Loyola University Chicago.Sound: "A mix of folk, rock and pop with a little bit of soul," says singer-guitarist Danny Surico, 29.Influences: Guster, The Beatles, Walk the Moon, Sam Cooke, The StrokesUpcoming performances: June 5 at Metro, July 9 at Taste of ChicagoBig accomplishments: "Sinners And Saints" was a finalist in the 2014 International Songwriting Competition.

2 The Gossip Structure

Real Name: René Valdiviezo, 27Neighborhoods: LoopExperience: Valdiviezo started playing pop-punk and alternative as a teenager and became a rapper six years ago after getting into Kanye West during his time at Columbia College.Sound: "A social style of hip-hop," he says. "I'm not isolating fans from one region of the city or another. I might be the only 'downtown' rapper."Influence: Kanye WestUpcoming performance: Sunday at Jerry's (Wicker Park)Fun facts: "A lot of people in Chicago's hip-hop scene know me by name. The ones that don't, know my face." Plus, SaveMoney affiliate Towkio will appear on Gossip Structure's forthcoming album.

Hundred Heads

Neighborhoods: Logan Square, LawndaleExperience: The current incarnation of the band has been playing together for about a year. Its core members bonded over a mutual love of "Blue Album"-era Weezer and playing in the high school jazz band.Sound: "Our go-to term is easy listening. Whatever we do, we try to make it as tasteful as possible. We're probably somewhere along the lines of ambient indie rock, or 'freak-rock' or something," says frontman Will Wisniewski, 23.Fun fact: Three of the group's members work at the same Starbucks.

3 Krystal Metcalfe

Neighborhood: East Lakeview

Experience: "It sounds cliché, but I've been playing music my whole life," the 28-year-old singer says. "I come from a very musically-minded family."

Sound: "I always say my music is soul meets musical theater."

Influences: "I listen to a lot of musical theater and soul. It might sound surprising, but I also love a lot of indie bands like Lucius and Grizzly Bear. My vocal influences are Chaka Khan and Aretha Franklin."

Upcoming performance: May 19 at the Promontory

Big accomplishment: No shameless plug—Metcalfe said she's proud of RedEye choosing her as one of "15 Chicago Artists To Watch in 2015."

4 Oshwa

Neighborhoods: Pilsen, Bridgeport

Experience: The quartet has been playing music since early 2012. Its first EP, "transmissions from the midwest: a real-america tribute," came out in August 2012.

Sound: "Art pop. Pop music but with an experimental flair," says singer Alicia Walter, 24.

Influences: Walter has Majical Cloudz, Adult Jazz, Bully and My Brightest Diamond on repeat lately.

Upcoming performance: May 29 at Beat Kitchen

Fun fact: "Three of us live in the house where we practice. That's not really a fun fact, but that's the first thing that comes to mind."

5 Phenom

Real Name: Teh'Ray Hale

Neighborhood: Hyde Park

Experience: 23 years as a rapper and spoken-word poet

Sound: "Music with a purpose, like putting your medicine in apple sauce. Necessary and conscious hip-hop," he says.

Influences: Gang Starr, N.W.A., Redman, A Tribe Called Quest, Nas and many, many more. Phenom also was inspired by Fast Eddie's "Hip House" when he was 13.

Fun fact: He's performed with Kanye West.

Big accomplishments: Heavily involved in inspiring positive change in youths, Phenom created a South Side mentoring organization called L.Y.R.I.C., an acronym for Let Your Rhymes Inspire Creativity.

Stereospeak

Neighborhoods: Lincoln Park, Lakeview

Experience: Singer Mike Mitzner, 27, and drummer Logan Ortega, 26, met at the University of Alabama and started the band in 2009.

Sound: "It's flattering because a lot of people compare us to Radiohead. Our sound is indie rock that comes from a pop-minded side as well as a heavier side," Mitzner says.

Influences: Interpol, Radiohead, Bonobo and Tame Impala

Fun facts: Stereospeak's current bassist Tim Gauntner was already a fan before he joined. When he realized the group was looking for a new bass player, he reached out and has been with the band for about six months.

6 Walkingshoe

Real Name: "Joe"

Neighborhood: Horner Park

Experience: Nearly nine years of playing music for fun. At 29, he's been a professional beat maker and producer for about two years.

Sound: "Very organic, hip-hop beats with electronic elements," he says. "I try to make my music sound like it's a live band jamming too."

Influence: J. Dilla

Upcoming performance: May 5 at Abbey Pub
Big accomplishment: He's produced killer beats for Towkio's "Eyes" and ShowYouSuck's "Gucci Mane."

Speedy Ortiz

ALBUM REVIEW

Foil Deer
Speedy Ortiz

On paper, a band sounding like Pavement or Dinosaur Jr. might not be the most innovative thing in the 2010s. Yet after hearing Speedy Ortiz's excellent "Foil Deer," it's obvious that fuzzy, guitar-based indie rock is still pretty essential.

Fortunately, where many current '90s-inspired revivalists fall into a lazy game of spot-the-influences, this Massachusetts-based outfit injects personality and emotional resonance. Boasting the clever songwriting of singer/guitarist Sadie Dupuis, "Foil Deer" is full of honest insights and dense wordplay. On the searing single "Raising The Skate," she lifts the "I'm not bossy, I'm the boss" slogan from the Beyoncé-led "Ban Bossy" campaign before turning unflinchingly self-loathing in the rejection anthem "The Graduates" with, "I was the best at being second place." With standout "Mister Difficult," arguably the band's prettiest song ever thanks to liking, gorgeous guitars, she sings, "I'm seeing Mister Difficult and easy to be Mister Difficult too."

Even with its relatively raised profile after 2013's stellar, jangly debut "Major Arcana," Speedy Ortiz still keeps its music wonderfully ramshackle and loose. When the band does get outside of its comfort zone, like on the industrial-strength thump of "Puffer" or the zany, frantic punk of "Swell Content," the gleeful genre traipsing is organic. Elsewhere, like the knotty rock of "Dot X" and the pummeling guitar blast of "Ginger," Speedy Ortiz manages to be impeccably tight while seeming like everything can fall apart in a messy second.

In an interview, Dupuis eloquently spoke about indie rock's diversity problem and the need to amplify "queer performers, performers of color or women," saying, "You can't have a Kurt Cobain anymore—or you can, but it's not going to be a white guy." While Speedy Ortiz doesn't seem poised to have the same rapidly ascendant career as those alternative icons, her perceptive and refreshing voice is as needed for indie rock as Cobain's was for grunge.

Put the over in ‘hangover’

By Emily Wickwire | CHICAGO TRIBUNE
While there’s no cure (yet) for the morning-after misery that comes from a night of too many drinks, there are a few popular coping mechanisms. One of these is indulging in a comforting, alcohol-absorbing meal during this suffering, which usually translates to something fried, carb-laden or creamy. Vegetables are an alien concept here. A number of restaurants understand how you are feeling and have just the dishes you need, from crispy chicken and waffles to steaming noodle soup. (Note: The FDA has not approved these dishes as treatment.)

Hangover chilaquiles ($12) at Danny’s Egghead Diner
2012 W. Irving Park Road 773-857-0171

The No. 1 rule of hangover food: Avoid anything too refined. At this no-frills North Center restaurant, you can be sure the cheesy, spicy mess that is Danny’s hangover chilaquiles may help soak up the rest of the alcohol in your system while providing just the right amount of Sunday morning sloppiness. This Mexican brunch favorite—a dish that is widely rumored to have the power to cure hangovers, beyond just the version at Danny’s—is a hefty smattering of crispy fried corn tortilla, chorizo, salsa and over-easy eggs, topped with a scoop of creamy guacamole and bits of crumbly queso fresco. Vegetarians and pork-abstainers can partake in this dish by opting for soy chorizo instead.

Hangover breakfast ($13) at The Bristol
2152 N. Damen Ave. 773-862-5555

Taking its cue from the soothing, homey feel of a steaming bowl of ramen or Vietnamese pho, this Asian-inspired breakfast is proof that you don’t necessarily need grease-drenched food to alleviate your post-binge state. The Bristol’s take on hangover comfort food—and the brainchild of executive chef Chris Pandel—consists of a combination of dense noodles, roasted pork belly, a rotation of beef and pork products such as beef tongue and small coins of shrimp cake. Added to the bowl are seasonal vegetables or pickled ingredients such as kimchi, and herbs such as cilantro, which float in a flavorful, meat-based broth. The base of the soup, “conceived out of a utilization standpoint,” according to Pandel, comes from the restaurant’s braising liquids, and is enhanced with spicy, pungent notes from star anise and chilies. A soft-poached egg is situated on top of the soup for diners to burst open upon spooning a taste of the soup.

Hangover helper ($13) at Fork
4600 N. Lincoln Ave. 773-751-1500

For a tried-and-true antidote, opt for the sleep-inducing goodness of the hangover helper. Essentially an updated take on traditional biscuits and gravy, this dish is composed of an 8-ounce, herby buttermilk biscuit stacked with layers of house-cured bacon, cheddar cheese and fried eggs before being doused in thick, rich chicken sausage gravy.

That's when daredevil Nik Wallenda will get back to daredevil. According to the Tribune, the tightrope enthusiast who set a world record here in November walking on a cable between the Leo Burnett Building and Marina City announced Monday he will next take on Orlando's 400-foot rotating observation wheel, the Orlando Eye.

That's how many episodes of Aziz Ansari's new sitcom Netflix has ordered, Variety reports. The show will feature the comedian along with Jon Benjamin, Lena Waithe, Eric Wareheim, Noel Wells and Kelvin Yu, but we don't know just yet what it'll be called or what it's about. We do know, however, if Ansari's behind it, it'll most likely be hilarious.

Passengers on the Dream Disney cruise ship will be adding a galaxy far, far away to their island-hopping itinerary come October, People reports, with the opening of the liner's Star Wars: Millennium Falcon playroom. The replica of Han Solo's spacecraft on the ship, which will let guests navigate the Falcon or participate in a Jedi Training Academy, will, unfortunately, be restricted to visitors ages 3 to 12.

THE DIGIT

That's how much a woman claiming to be Mila Kunis' childhood friend is seeking in damages from the actress for—wait for it—stealing the woman's beloved pet chicken at about age 5. Kristina Karo alleges while the two were growing up together in Ukraine, Kunis heartlessly nabbed Karo's pet "Doggie" the chicken, Yahoo UK reports. The money, the lawsuit says, is to cover therapy costs and compensation for emotional distress. Checks out.
